

JOINT HEALTH

The cartilage of a healthy joint is a “shock absorber”, providing a cushion between the bones forming the joint. When the joint cartilage is damaged, bone-on-bone contact occurs and results in the formation of bone spurs, joint pain and inflammation.

Degenerative changes to a joint are commonly seen in animals that are advancing in age, overweight or have had a previous injury to the joint.

The following signs help to detect joint disease.

- Limping, stiffness
- Lagging behind during walks
- Difficulty in rising from rest
- Unwillingness to climb stairs or jump into the car
- Licking or chewing at the affected joint
- Pain upon handling or manipulation of the joint
- Lack of appetite

- Inability to jump on or off objects
- Decreased grooming activity
- Changes in behaviour, withdrawal
- Changes to litter box behaviour
- Weight loss, reduced appetite

Cats are good at hiding signs of pain, therefore watch for subtle changes.
